Name

Instructor

Course

Date

Types of Fans in Sports

Every sport played in the world today attracts different kinds of individuals, who support its numerous events and its best players regardless of the outcomes of their games. However, understanding the game is an essential aspect of enjoying it because of the need to comply with the regulations outlined for those attending every match. For instance, football fans should be aware of the rules that apply to every outcome during a game between Competitor A and Competitor B to balance their expectations before vocally accusing the relevant authorities of unfairness. Fans should understand that different sports have various rules that define their existence. Many scholars have identified a degree of similarity between the fan reactions demonstrated across different sports games, as well as in the ways they show support for their favorite players and teams. Even though various sports have different modes of play, they attract similar devotees, front runners, and pink hats who respond in the same way towards various outcomes recorded during the game.

The Devotee Fans

The devotee fans are the most visible and outrageous individuals one can observe at every sporting event. First, they understand the nature of the sport and may make biased predictions before a gaming event regardless of their awareness concerning the strength of their favorite team. The devotee fans are the worst group of fans one can associate with because of their strong belief in and sense of loyalty towards their favorite team. Significantly, this type of supporter wears an outfit that specifically shows support for their team, and listens to every news outlet that discusses their team's performance. In many instances, they participate in polls because of their dedication to the club performance. However, any person who has been around devotee fans will admit that it was unbearable to hold meaningful conversations with them because of their biased comments that do not consider logic. Regardless of the position of a team in the league, there are times when it is not in its best form. Devotee supporters believe that the team should win every match regardless of the external conditions that contribute to the group's overall fitness.

Over the course of years, devotee followers can cause other individuals to love or hate a given sport. For instance, football fans form the largest group of every game because of its broad reach in the world. Football acts as a unifying factor that defines friendships, among other aspects of social life. From this perspective, supporting the sport encourages individuals to enhance their social interactions, supplementing other aspects of life that add meaning to relationships. Many individuals use sporting events as a chance to share the aspirations of their peers, as well as engage in other conversations that define the need to exist. Understanding the numerous variations that occur during a sporting event presents an opportunity for corporations to explore the impact of these events on their target audience. Devotee fans are "the life of the party" and make every game exciting because of their role in creating traction on and off the pitch. For this reason, individuals should learn to accommodate the different views expressed by other people to coexist peacefully as fans of a particular sport.

The Pink Hat Fans

This category of supporters is the most withdrawn group of individuals because of their passion for the sport. In many instances, the pink hat fans attend matches because their friends love the game. For example, pink hat fans attending a football match will attack the devotee followers because of the wild nature they display while supporting the sport. The only reason pink hat fans participate in sporting events is to demonstrate camaraderie to their friends and family who love the specific game. Because of their limited interest in the game, pink hat fans are the least exciting population group corporations can target in their marketing activities. On the same note, pink hat fans are always focused on other activities, such as talking on their phones or engaging on different topics that fall outside of football. Unlike the devoted fans who closely follow every aspect of the game at a sporting event, pink hat fans will always ask what took place after the crowd cheers.

Since the pink hats are social individuals, their reason for attending the sporting event is the interactions they will have with different individuals throughout the game. Importantly, different sporting events present people with an opportunity to catch up on various topical issues affecting their lives. Likewise, pink hat fans are not interested in whether a team wins or loses, but are only attending the sporting event because they seek to interact with different individuals in their immediate environment. Besides, the psychological effect of a cheering crowd is one of the most soothing feelings that a person can have, because of its ability to distract them from their immediate situation. Pink hat fans are the most distracted individuals in a stadium because of their limited interest in sporting activities. Therefore, sporting teams should develop tactics and explore various approaches that can yield favorable results in the world today.

Front Runners

Unlike the devotees who support specific teams and the pink hat fans who are not interested in sports, front runners support the winners and love to intimidate the losing side. Importantly, front runners are a unique type of supporter who are interested in different sporting events but lack the loyalty demonstrated by the devotees. It is impossible to predict the alignment shown by front runners because of their inability to identify the winning team before a match. If individuals are preparing to teach their children about the significance of sports in their immediate environment, they should avoid the front runners, who lack a certain level of consistency in their support for different sporting events. When the Giants were thriving in the NFL, the front runners wore their jerseys and supported them at their various sporting events. However, they abandoned the Giants and shifted to the Patriots who have since dominated the league since the 2000s.

Conclusion

Even though various sports have different modes of play, they attract the same kinds of devotees, front runners, and pink hats who respond in the same way towards various outcomes recorded during a game. The three types of fans are visible at every sporting event, and are associated with different individuals who complement their interests. It is easy to identify devotees at any game because of their outrageous character that is hard to ignore. While it might be impossible to locate the pink hat fans, the front runners can be seen, especially during altercations with the devotees. However, the different types of fans should accommodate the diverse views of other individuals during a match. For their part, sporting authorities should discourage any form of interactions that can lead to violence during and after games. Informing people about the regulations and imposing stringent measures on those found on the wrong side of them promotes a sense of responsibility among fans who attend different sporting events.

DO MY ESSAY.net

Need a more personalized sample?

Order now

Get quote